

This article talks about different type of activism throughout history and how activism has change over time and how activism was seen totally different back them than now. Women suffrage movement in the late 19th was the beginning of women activism. Women were demanding the right to vote. Activism is mostly based on a change people want to make it happen throughout the years activism has been use more and more due to the fact that people are becoming more of specific problems like racism, hate against the LGBT community and how this individuals are requesting protection and overall some type representation because as a citizen they deserved respect just like everyone else and they shouldn't be mistreated because of their sexual orientation. Activism has more to do with a change for want to accomplish for yourself or others. One major event of activism was that black lives matter movement people of all ages went out in the street on a peaceful protest to fight for black people live due to the increase of death of black people by the new york police. This movement was so powerful due to the new tools we have now like the internet, social media it was something that went world wide and is something that back them we didn't have so it made it easier for more people to get involved. The film number 1 "knock down the house" basically talks about many important things and how we as working class don't have the same representation or no type of representation at all in the white house. Alexandria ocasio-cortez is a hispanic women trying to make her way to the united states congress. This film talks about how hard is for women to be taken in consideration and how they have to work twice as hard than men for their voice to be heard. In the film all these women are fighting for a purpose and it's to be able to represent the people of their district. Requirement to go on the ballot was 1,250 but because she was a woman she had to get 10,000 to go on the ballot. The congress is 81% white men who are millionaires most of these people are not concerned about poverty in lower class or climate change. They don't have the same passion as somebody that has been through those type situations. As is being said on the film you can't have a person representing your borough when they don't even live within the state they are representing. Alexandria talks about how hard it was for her family to survive their financial crisis and she said that probably millions of Americans are going through the same situation and not having someone to represent them. This is why this was so important to her because she knew how hard it was to be a middle class person in New York City and this is why she is fighting so hard to make a change.
