Aisosa Guobadia
ANI Class

Amali Njoroge

Log Line: Avoiding a dull path towards community college and customer service, a prideful young artist works hard to attend art school in spite of financial trouble, a strict work ethic, and her mother.

Amali is a high school junior who wants to attend art college. Posting her works online, and getting a decent amount of attention, this bright-eyed, prideful, young artist believes her art is capable of getting accepted, eventually. She wants to attend her local art, Printon Prep, despite her works were rejected in the past.

Amali is Kenyan American (first generation). Her design is a mix of my old high school fashion, and how I thought "the art kid" would dress. I gave her a sweater since it's fall in her area. Vintage sweaters and plain black, jogging shoes since she doesn't have much to wear. (Art school is pretty expensive, and she's gathered her pocket savings, believing it will help her.) I wet with the three puffs in the end. They look cute, and they give her a silhouette.