

Lizeth Estrada

ECE- 211

Professor Kristan M. Scarola

Date: 12/10/20

Learning experiences connect to bigger ideas by showing the students the concepts of the lessons that are going to be taught in the class section which is called a curriculum that will help students have an understanding better of their knowledge. They will be able to expand on their ideas when they express themselves in art, writing, or even in the music movement, students will also be able to answer the essential question at the end of the activity. As the article states nurturing creativity (pg8) it states “every day the amount of information available to us is exploding. along with new tools for communicating, making connections, and sharing knowledge. but with this continual increase in information comes the challenge of how to critically analyze the content, determine what is needed to solve current problems, and transform information into innovative ideas”. This indicates that it important for students to take on challenges that are going to help them out through their academic school year.

This activity is developmental and culturally appropriate for a diverse group of pre-k learners because throughout their school year they will be able to know what race is and how students will be able to interact with one another. This curriculum that been planned for the students that will have them participate in the activity no matter the color that you are students are going to treat everyone with respect and be equally treated right and will also share and have good communication with each other. In the article of becoming upended: teaching and learning about race and racism with young children and their families (pg5) “ once you develop a classroom library that addresses race and racism from many perspectives, prepare yourself to respond to children’s questions as they arise Ms.Verwayne recalled that when reading about the life of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr her children wanted to know more”. This means how the teacher had her curriculum all ready for her students to learn about race and the importance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr since he came from the civil rights movements her students wanted to learn about him which is good and that how they learn how to treat others the same no matter where you come from. Therefore it important to teach young children about race in an appropriate way for the students to learn and understand better.

The activity offers chances for different ways of learning styles and how it benefits them throughout the class lessons because they learn in different ways for example in arts and creative writing they can mix colors with paint or with watercolors. And in writing, they can write how they feeling and expand their ideas that they have to think of either in a book report or reading a book as well. Reading and writing benefits students as they develop and grow properly, as well as art they can do so many things which can help them out in the future. Also by going to the art center and by going to the library grabbing a book can help them learn.